Global Cat Day, which takes place October 16, reminds us that educating, engaging, and empowering people to defend and protect cats is the right thing to do.

Global Cat Day demands that community leaders abolish policies that result in the killing of cats; equip communities with lifesaving, humane policies like Trap-Neuter-Return (TNR); and change any policies that threaten cats' health and safety.

TNR is the mainstream approach in which cats are humanely trapped, spayed or neutered, vaccinated, ear-tipped and returned to the outdoor homes where they live and thrive. As sound public policy, TNR reduces shelter intake, "euthanasia" and calls to animal services, which saves taxpayer dollars.

6 Common Misconceptions of Feral Cats:

1. Feral Cats are a different species from domestic cats. Feral cats are simply not socialized.
2. Feral cats will attack humans and pets. Feral cats will keep their distance from humans and pets.
3. Feral cats will spread disease. According to the Centers for Disease Control, it is quite rare for cats to spread diseases to humans, and even more rare for feral cats, who mostly avoid humans.
4. Feral cats are pests that beg for food. Feral cats are fearful of humans. If a cat is mewling at your door for good, odds are it's a stray.
5. If you find a feral cat, you should take it to a shelter. Keeping a feral cat caged in a shelter, even, briefly can be stressful and damaging. You also put that cat at high risk of being put down.
6. Feral can be adopted and kept as pets. Adult feral cats are usually too scared of humans to ever be kept as indoor pets. If they are kittens, they can be socialized and put into homes.
